Japan-Southeast Asian Security Partnerships Diverging approaches to a Rising China

Speaker Stephen R. NAGY (International Christian Univ., Tokyo)

Moderator Jean-Michel BUTEL (MFJ, UMIFRE 19)

Summary

This presentation will examine Japanese-Southeast Asia security partnerships from an Southeast Asian perspective. It argues that Japanese-Southeast Asian security partnerships cannot be understood with a blanket formula. Instead, we must divide ASEAN countries into "peripheral-core" and "core-peripheral" countries that have different security challenges and political-economic relationships with China. This bifurcation in two categories encompasses the different competitive advantages each grouping has in terms of their position in the regional and global economic chain. It is the combination of these factors that drives and shapes Southeast Asian strategic approaches and perspectives on Japan Southeast Asia security partnerships. It finds that client-state relations and strategic-balancing based on norms, trade and security partnerships to be the core drivers behind Japanese-Southeast Asia security partnership perceptions and approaches.
